In 1979, Mary Jane Wszolek started cleaning homes in the Roanoke Valley with a straightforward idea: do the work thoroughly, treat people well, and guarantee their satisfaction. As President of Mar-Ja Enterprises, Inc., she built that idea into The Happy Housekeepers, a cleaning service Roanoke families have relied on ever since.

How One Woman Started a Valley Institution

Her approach was personal from the first phone call. Clients spoke to someone who cared about getting their home right, and after the first cleaning they received a follow-up call to make sure they were happy. That habit is still part of how the company operates today. It is a small thing, but it reflects a philosophy that sets a family business apart from a faceless franchise.

As word spread, Mary Jane listened to what customers were asking for. In 1986 she expanded into office cleaning, creating the Corporate Clean division for commercial and janitorial work. Over time the company added specialized services for builders, contractors and apartment managers, plus move-in and move-out cleanings. Each step grew naturally out of the same idea of being a single trusted call for anything that needed cleaning.

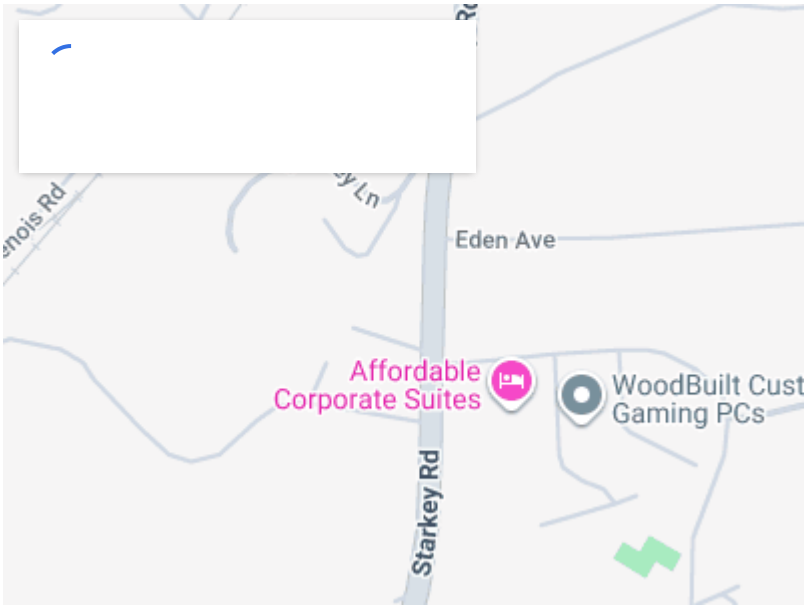

Mary Jane passed away suddenly in 1999. Rather than letting the business fade, the family company carried on, holding on to her work ethic and her promise of satisfaction guaranteed. Today The Happy Housekeepers is led by President Paula Anderson and remains locally owned and operated, still based in the Cave Spring area of southwest Roanoke County, still answering the same phone number clients have called for years.

That continuity shows in the company's credentials. It has been BBB accredited since 1993 and holds an A+ rating. Employees are bonded and insured through the company. Products and equipment are supplied, plans are flexible from one-time to weekly, bi-weekly or monthly, and estimates are always free with no obligation. Long-time clients often mention on the company website how consistent the service has stayed over many years, which is perhaps the best tribute to the founder.

Family local cleaning company Roanoke businesses also tend to think in decades rather than quarters. Decisions are made with the next generation of clients in mind, not the next sales target. That is why the company still offers free estimates with no obligation, still calls after the first clean, and still lets clients request their own products when they have a preference. Those habits would be easy to drop in the name of efficiency, but they are part of what Mary Jane left behind.

If you would like to experience the kind of cleaning service Mary Jane built, call (540) 774-4299.
