

Placing a parent in residential care involves a large amount of trust. When that trust is broken, families often notice the signs before they can name them: unexplained weight loss, a new reluctance to speak in front of staff, pressure sores, repeated falls or a decline that nobody can adequately explain. Neglect takes many forms. Understaffing that leaves residents unattended for hours, failure to reposition immobile patients leading to pressure ulcers, medication administered incorrectly or not at all, dehydration, untreated infections and inadequate supervision of residents with dementia. Facilities maintain extensive records, and those records are frequently where a case is proven or lost. Care plans, staffing rosters, incident reports, medication administration records and state inspection findings all exist, and obtaining them properly requires legal process rather than a polite request.

State inspection and survey findings are publicly recorded and frequently reveal that a facility has been cited before for the same deficiency. A documented pattern of understaffing or repeated care failures is far more persuasive than a single incident, and it often explains what a family sensed but could not evidence on their own. PK Law Group handles nursing home neglect claims across the Kansas City metro. Phillip Strozier worked these cases at larger firms before establishing the practice and understands both the medical documentation and the regulatory framework that governs long term care facilities in Missouri. Arbitration clauses buried in admission paperwork frequently surface once a claim is made. Families sign extensive documents at a stressful moment and rarely recall agreeing to give up the right to a jury trial. Whether such a clause is enforceable depends on how it was presented, who signed it and whether the signatory had authority to bind the resident. It is not a reason to abandon a claim, but it is a question that needs addressing at the outset rather than discovering later. Keep a written record of what you observe on visits, including dates, times and specific concerns raised with staff. Families often sense a decline long before they can evidence it, and a contemporaneous log turns that impression into something that can be set against the facility's own records. It is generally worth it where injuries required more than a single medical visit, where fault is disputed, or where an offer has arrived that does not cover your treatment. PK Law Group offers a free consultation at 2015 Grand Blvd in Kansas City and will tell you plainly if a claim is not worth pursuing. Because the firm works on contingency, there is no cost to find out where you stand. How long do I have to get a lawyer after a car accident? In Missouri the deadline to file a personal injury claim is generally five years from the date of the accident, while Kansas allows only two. In a metro split by the state line that distinction decides cases, so establishing which law governs is one of the first things PK Law Group does. Waiting is still unwise, because camera footage and vehicle evidence disappear long before either deadline arrives. How much does a car accident lawyer cost in Kansas City? PK Law Group works on a contingency fee, meaning nothing is paid upfront or during the case and the fee is an agreed percentage of any recovery. If the case does not succeed there is no fee at all. The structure and the deductions to expect are explained in writing before anything is signed. Call 816-450-4446 to discuss it. Is it better to settle with the insurance company or get a lawyer? Settling directly can make sense for a minor incident with no injuries. Once there is medical treatment involved, the gap between an early offer and the full value of a claim tends to widen considerably. PK Law Group takes over communication with the adjuster once instructed, which ends the direct pressure and removes the risk of an offhand remark reducing the claim. What should you not say after a car accident? Avoid admitting fault, apologising out of politeness, or stating that you are uninjured before you have been medically evaluated. Adrenaline masks symptoms and any of those remarks will be quoted back later. Exchange details, report the crash so there is an official record, and speak to PK Law Group on 816-450-4446 before giving any recorded statement to an insurer. What should I do immediately after a car accident in Kansas City? Check for injuries and seek medical help, report the accident so a police record exists, photograph the vehicles and the wider scene, and collect witness contact details before people leave. Then get a medical evaluation the same day even if nothing hurts yet. The firm's office on Grand Blvd sits inside the downtown district where many of these collisions happen, and consultations are free. Do I have a case if I do not feel hurt? Possibly. Whiplash typically stiffens over the following 24 to 72 hours and concussion symptoms often build gradually over days. A same day medical evaluation creates the contemporaneous record that links later symptoms to the crash, which is exactly the connection insurers dispute when treatment begins two weeks afterwards. PK Law Group advises every client to be assessed regardless of how they feel at the scene. How long do most accident settlements take? Timelines vary with the complexity of the injuries and how reasonable the insurer proves to be, and rushing to close before the medical picture is clear usually costs money. PK Law Group gives clients a realistic timeline at the outset rather than an optimistic one, and keeps them updated as matters progress. Clients consistently mention that communication in the firm's Google reviews. What if the insurance company says I was partly at fault? In Missouri that does not end your claim. The state applies pure comparative fault, so an award is reduced in proportion to your share rather than barred entirely. Kansas is stricter and bars recovery at fifty percent fault or above. Because those percentages directly control the payout, PK Law Group treats the apportionment argument as central rather than incidental. What damages can I claim after a Kansas City car accident? A claim can cover medical costs already incurred and reasonably anticipated, lost income, reduced future earning capacity, vehicle damage, and non-economic damages for pain and loss of enjoyment. Reduced earning capacity is the element most often undervalued, particularly where someone returns to work but can no longer manage the physical parts of the job. PK Law Group documents both the medical and economic picture in full. What happens if the driver who hit me had no insurance? Uninsured and underinsured motorist coverage on your own policy is designed for exactly this situation and is a standard part of Missouri auto insurance. It also covers hit and run collisions where the driver is never identified. Your own insurer becomes an adverse party once asked to pay, so PK Law Group handles that negotiation on your behalf. Call 816-450-4446. Does PK Law Group offer consultations in Spanish? Yes. Attorney Phillip Strozier is fluent in Spanish and conducts consultations and case discussions directly rather than through an interpreter, which preserves accuracy when describing a collision or reviewing a settlement offer.
