Life at Smith Mountain Lake comes with docks, decks, wooded lots and plenty of water, and every one of those features attracts pests. Lake homes and weekend cabins often sit empty for stretches of time, which gives mice, spiders, wasps and ants a quiet opportunity to move in. Perdue Exterminators includes Smith Mountain Lake in its service area, bringing the same family owned approach https://zukoski-group.chbe.illinois.edu/index/index.php/DIY_Pest_Control_vs_Professional_Exterminators_Roanoke_Homeowners it has used in the Roanoke Valley since 1969.

Moisture is the biggest factor. Homes close to the shoreline face higher humidity, damp crawl spaces and wood that stays wet after storms. Those conditions draw eastern subterranean termites, carpenter ants and camel crickets, and they encourage crawl space mold. Perdue's termite elimination comes with renewable annual warranties, and the company also helps eliminate and control crawl space mold, so lake property owners can address both issues together.

Wooded lots bring their own visitors. Mice and other rodents move into lake homes when the weather cools, especially if the house is closed up for the season. Perdue's rodent control uses baits and traps that do not rely on toxic poisons, which suits homes surrounded by wildlife and visited by grandkids and pets. Technicians also look for entry points around decks, utility lines and garage doors so rodents cannot simply walk back in.

Stinging Insects on the Water

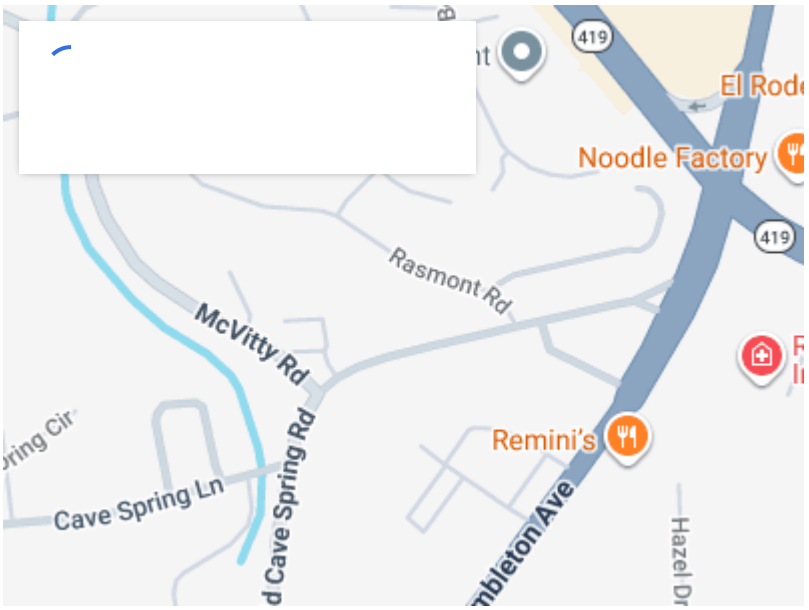

Docks, boathouses, porch ceilings and deck railings are favorite nesting spots for paper wasps and yellowjackets. Carpenter bees drill into exposed wood on docks and outdoor furniture. Flying insect control is part of Perdue's service list, and dealing with nests early in the season makes summer weekends far more relaxing for everyone using the lake.

Many lake properties also rely on private wells and septic systems. When buying or selling a home near the water, Perdue can provide water testing and septic inspection reports along with a wood destroying insect report, simplifying the inspection process for agents and buyers who are often coordinating from out of town.

For seasonal homeowners, regular service while the house is empty means problems get caught early rather than discovered on the first warm weekend of spring. The team can schedule visits around your calendar and let you know what they found.
