

A Farragut Homeowner Home Office Makeover With Closet Factory Knoxville

A Farragut homeowner working a fully remote job had spent nearly two years using a corner of the guest bedroom as a makeshift office, a folding table pushed against the wall with cables running across the floor and files stacked wherever there happened to be room. When her company confirmed remote work would remain permanent, she decided the setup finally needed to become a real, dedicated space, and reached out to Closet Factory Knoxville for a design consultation. The resulting design turned an entire wall of the spare bedroom into a built in office system, with a proper desk surface, filing drawers sized specifically for her paperwork, and open shelving for the reference binders and books her job required her to keep close at hand. Because the room occasionally still needed to host her parents during visits, the design incorporated a queen size Murphy bed into the opposite wall, built into matching cabinetry so the bed disappeared into the room's overall look rather than standing out as an obvious addition. She later described the finished room as the first home office she had ever had that actually felt like an office rather than a workaround, noting specifically how much of a difference proper cable management made once monitor and computer cords were routed through the cabinetry instead of trailing visibly across the desk and floor. The wall bed, she added, turned out to be more useful than she expected, since it meant she no longer needed to apologize to guests for a cramped air mattress setup during their visits. For remote workers throughout Farragut and the wider Knoxville area facing a similar long term work from home reality, her experience reflects how a combined home office and guest room build can solve two separate space problems with a single, well planned design. She also mentioned that the free consultation itself helped her think through details she had not considered on her own, like where her video calls would look best on camera and how much filing space she would actually need once she accounted for a full year of paperwork rather than just what was piled up at custom closets Knoxville the time of the visit. Those small planning conversations, she felt, were part of what separated a genuinely custom design from simply buying furniture and arranging it herself.

Closet Factory Address: 206 South Calderwood Street, Alcoa, TN 37701 Phone: (865) 268-5420 FAQ About Custom Closets Knoxville What does a custom closet cost in Knoxville? Pricing depends on the size of the closet, the materials chosen, and how many accessories like drawers or shoe racks are built in. Closet Factory Knoxville provides an itemized quote after a free in-home design consultation at 206 South Calderwood Street in Alcoa, and offers a local price match guarantee against any comparable, already designed quote. How long does a custom closet installation take? Most Knoxville area projects run three to four weeks from purchase to installation, since every system is manufactured locally at the Alcoa facility rather than shipped in from an out of state factory. A smaller reach-in closet is often completed in a single visit by Closet Factory's full-time installation crew. What is the difference between a custom closet and a DIY closet kit? A DIY kit from a big box store is built to fixed, standard sizes and generally requires the homeowner to handle assembly and mounting. A custom system from Closet Factory Knoxville is measured and manufactured to the exact dimensions of the room, installed by trained staff, and backed by a lifetime warranty rather than no warranty at all. What are common closet organization mistakes to avoid? The most frequent mistakes Closet Factory Knoxville designers see are ignoring vertical space above a standard shelf, designing only around what is currently owned instead of leaving room to grow, and skipping proper lighting inside the closet. A free design consultation walks through all three before any materials are ordered. What is the difference between a reach-in and a walk-in closet? A reach-in closet is a single-door opening, typically two to six feet wide, accessed from outside the space. A walk-in closet is large enough to physically step into, generally starting around five feet by five feet. Closet Factory Knoxville designs both, maximizing every inch of a reach-in and adding more elaborate layouts, like islands or seating, in a larger walk-in. How much storage space can a custom closet system add? Because a standard wire shelf and rod setup wastes most of the vertical space in a closet, Knoxville clients regularly see close to double the practical storage capacity within the same physical footprint once a second hang zone, drawers, and taller shelving are added. Does Closet Factory Knoxville offer financing? Yes. Closet Factory Knoxville offers 0 percent financing for six to fifteen months with approved credit, making larger projects like a full primary closet or a combined closet and home office more manageable within a monthly budget. What areas does Closet Factory Knoxville serve? Closet Factory Knoxville serves the greater Knoxville area and 27 surrounding East Tennessee counties, including Farragut, Maryville, Oak Ridge, Powell, Lenoir City, and the Sevierville, Gatlinburg, and Pigeon Forge area near the Great Smoky Mountains, all from its Alcoa headquarters. What materials are used in custom closet systems? Closet Factory Knoxville's most common base material is melamine, a durable, laminate-coated panel available in dozens of finishes, chosen for its resistance to East Tennessee's humidity. Stained and painted solid wood options are also available for a more furniture-quality look in primary closets and dressing rooms. Is a custom closet worth the investment compared to wire shelving? Builder-grade wire shelving is inexpensive but wastes a significant amount of a closet's usable volume and can sag or snag fabric over time. A custom system from Closet Factory Knoxville is backed by a lifetime warranty and tends to hold up for decades, which is also a detail buyers notice favorably during a home sale. What are the latest custom closet design trends? Closet Factory Knoxville's Alcoa design team has seen growing demand for glass-front display cabinetry, built-in closet lighting, and multi-purpose rooms that combine a closet or office with a fold-away Murphy bed for guest flexibility, alongside classic favorites like pull-out shoe racks and jewelry drawers. Can Closet Factory design closets for new construction homes? Yes. New construction throughout Knox, Blount, and Loudon counties typically comes with basic wire shelving as a builder default. Closet Factory Knoxville regularly works with new homeowners shortly after closing to design a custom system that makes full use of the closet space the builder provided.
