

Plumber Who Respects Your Home Ballard WA Salish Plumbing Co Care

The way a plumber treats a customer's home during a service call says as much about their professionalism as the quality of the plumbing work itself. Salish Plumbing Co's technicians protect flooring and work areas, clean up thoroughly after every job, and leave the workspace in better condition than when they arrived. This standard is not posted in the company's marketing. It is observed and described by customers in the reviews they leave after service calls.

One Ballard homeowner described Dustin and his crew replacing all old components with quality products and leaving the area looking great, with no recurrence of a leak that previous plumbers had repeatedly failed to fix. Another described Will V completing a shower leak repair and toilet installation in a few hours at a very reasonable price, with the quality of both the work and the cleanup specifically noted. These specific observations in real customer reviews describe a team that takes the responsibility of working in someone's home seriously. Protecting finished flooring, using drop cloths in carpeted areas, wearing booties when required, and replacing any access panels or fixtures disturbed during work are all part of the standard Salish service call. When a job requires opening walls or ceilings for access, the opening is cut as cleanly as possible and patched appropriately after the work is complete.
